On July 1, 1962, Old Dominion College became an independent, four-year institution in Virginia’s vaunted higher education system.

Over the 50 years since then, this new kid on the block has made its own history and taken its own, rightful place among the commonwealth’s more established colleges and universities.

Those of you who have supported this great institution have been integral to its success, and I extend my heartfelt thanks for your belief in Old Dominion University. As a forward-focused institution, we are continually resetting the bar to new heights in our ongoing goal to best serve our students, our community and the Commonwealth through rigorous academic programs, strategic partnerships and active civic engagement. And we pledge to build upon the following pillars as we embark on the next 50 years: nationally recognized faculty; cutting-edge, collaborative research; a diverse campus community; and innovative, engaging and relevant learning opportunities.

With more than 120,000 alumni, we are proud to say that our graduates over the years have established themselves as leaders on the global stage. Among our esteemed alumni are the chief financial officer at the U.S. Department of Labor, the CEO and owner of Plow and Hearth, and a member of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors. As beneficiaries of your support, our graduates are well prepared to take those first steps on a promising career path. I hope and trust that you have taken pride in what Old Dominion – and our graduates – have accomplished of late, and that you will continue to support our efforts with each new class of students and at each time we raise the bar in our educational mission.

With regard to recent achievements, there have been many. Our new Division of Student Engagement and Enrollment Services is indicative of our commitment to student success and student learning and reflects the university’s strategic plan goal of providing students the tools they need to succeed. Our effort to set a new standard for student success and student learning can also be seen in two recent additions on campus, the Student Success Center and Learning Commons. Both serve to empower students to take responsibility for their learning experiences and build their academic success plans.

No doubt you have heard about our Climate Change and Sea Level Rise Initiative, which I started late in 2010, and which gained momentum over the past year. Our goal is to focus Old Dominion’s expertise – from oceanography and psychology to risk management and theatre arts – on the challenges an urban coastal community faces from climate change. The university’s Office of Research gave startup funding totaling $200,000 to five research projects our faculty members are conducting to support the initiative. We hosted a daylong seminar in which local engineers from the public and private sectors mapped out the initial steps a community such as Hampton Roads should take to mitigate growing problems from flooding. Altogether, our initiative has identified 60 faculty members at ODU with expertise that can be put to use in formulating this response. I can report that the foundation is now in place for a program of research, education and leadership to address the challenges a coastal metropolis such as ours can expect from sea level rise and other climate-related change.

The nascent ODU Business Gateway has established Old Dominion as a leader in local and statewide economic development and the go-to solutions provider for Hampton Roads and beyond. The Business Gateway is a business-friendly entry point to the university, and our new Innovation Foundation is streamlining the processes by which the university, its faculty and its students can participate in commercial endeavors.
Also of note is the recent launch of our Office of Civic and Community Engagement to shepherd the university’s many community-oriented efforts and to explore and advance new opportunities to apply our expertise to community betterment.

Teaching, research and community engagement form the foundation of our educational enterprise and often come together in exciting and productive ways at Old Dominion University. I am pleased that the 2011 Foundations Annual Report highlights the critical pillar of community engagement.

In keeping with our strategic plan, we are focused on building positive perceptions of ODU in the community as we seek to encourage greater alumni and public support, but we are ever mindful that this can only happen if we are doing good things. When I reflect upon this past year, I am reminded of the many positive things that happened in our vibrant campus community and in the larger community that we serve.

Lastly, I can’t help but mention another source of pride for university administration. Old Dominion was selected in 2011 as a Chronicle of Higher Education Great Place to Work. And we recently received word that we have been selected for the second consecutive year for this distinction. In a survey conducted with more than 40,000 employees at over 300 colleges and universities, our own faculty and staff rated Old Dominion as an institution that excels in eight of the 12 recognition categories, giving us the distinction of being an Honor Roll school. We were recognized for our collaborative governance; professional/career development programs; teaching environment; job satisfaction; work/life balance; supervisor/department chair relationship; respect and appreciation; and diversity.

Such validation by our own employees, along with your support, can only lead to positive outcomes. Thank you for your continued commitment to Old Dominion University. You are an integral member of our community. Please know that you are always welcome here.

Sincerely,

John R. Broderick

Thank you for your continued commitment to Old Dominion University. You are an integral member of our community. Please know that you are always welcome here.
Message from the Executive Director for Foundations

Please enjoy this report from the Old Dominion University Foundations for calendar year 2011. On behalf of the Foundations, and the University, I would like to thank everyone that contributed to Old Dominion University last year. The University received $26.7 million in private support in 2011. These gifts, along with the continued investment gains on our endowment, will secure a bright future for ODU.

As an alumnus, I am so proud of the growth here at Old Dominion. Our enrollment has steadied at approximately 25,000 students and they are the best and brightest to date. We have managed to blossom from being labeled a “commuter school” to being a top choice for students from around the country, and the globe. The recent addition of a world-class recreational facility, new residence halls, football and a focus on student engagement has fostered a strong sense of community on campus.

The strength of the ODU community is evident in a variety of ways. A new community engagement program was launched by students during Homecoming this past year; the program is called the Monarch Citizen campaign. The Monarch Citizen campaign was developed in an effort to encourage the ODU community to be more committed to a culture of responsibility, engagement and pride. This campaign involves faculty, staff and students alike with the intention of preparing each and every one of us to be responsible members of the campus community, and beyond.

You can see the fruits of our labor in alumni like Keyon Carter. Carter, a former basketball standout, went on an outreach mission to Africa just four weeks after graduating from ODU. During his mission, he spent two weeks coaching children from the Embangweni School for the Deaf on the basics of basketball. This is just one example of how Monarch Citizens are making a difference around the world.

When you see all the great things happening in our community each day, especially the work of our students, you cannot help but be inspired. For this reason, President Broderick and his wife, Kate, established the Ellen Broderick – Joan Evon Award for Community Engagement and Service. You can read more about the award in this report. In addition, the report profiles some of our other achievements such as the Community Development Corporation’s workforce housing project and the Investing in Innovation grant that was awarded to us by the Department of Education.

As you read the 2011 Foundations Annual Report, I hope that you can be as proud as I am of Old Dominion University. Private support from alumni and friends is essential for maintaining the positive momentum on campus. Thank you again for your generosity and for being a part of our community.

Sincerely,

Alonzo C. Brandon ’85

Clark Nexsen, PC, a full service design firm headquartered in Norfolk, Va., is known locally and globally for its award winning architecture, engineering, interior design and planning services. In addition to design excellence, the firm is well known for its commitment to the community. For many years now, Clark Nexsen, PC employees have been strongly encouraged to participate in opportunities to build a better community outside of the office by volunteering their time for various charities and nonprofit organizations throughout the year. In fact, the company was awarded the Community Impact Award from United Way for six consecutive years. Fortunately, Old Dominion University is positioned to benefit not only from Clark Nexsen’s design and construction projects, but also its outreach.

As a Corporate Circle Partner with the Batten College of Engineering and Technology, Clark Nexsen, PC participates in networking opportunities for current students and alumni. These networking opportunities often lead to full-time employment for students after graduation. Currently, 58 ODU alumni work for Clark Nexsen, PC, several of which are employed in managerial positions. With so many alumni working at Clark Nexsen, PC, the company and its employees are closely tied to the University.

In addition to its professional support, Clark Nexsen, PC has provided generous monetary support for Old Dominion University. The Clark Nexsen Dominion Scholarship in Engineering was established in 2004 by alumni who are employees at Clark Nexsen, PC. To facilitate contributions to the scholarship the firm developed a payroll deduction system for employee donations. Furthermore, the Clark Nexsen Foundation generously agreed to match employee contributions one-for-one. The scholarship is awarded annually to a full time undergraduate student majoring in engineering and includes full in-state tuition plus room and board. Rising sophomore Michael Perkins was fortunate to receive the Clark Nexsen scholarship during the 2011-12 school year. Perkins said, “The Clark Nexsen scholarship has allowed me to pursue my educational goals without having to put them on hold for financial reasons. Had I not received this scholarship, it would have been difficult for me to attend ODU.”

In addition to the scholarship, Perkins was also awarded a summer internship with Clark Nexsen, PC.

When Clark Nexsen, PC employees are not busy working, recruiting and mentoring, you can find them at ODU sporting events. The company has suite facilities and season tickets for basketball and football. Employees, whether alumni or not, can be seen tailgating and cheering on the Monarchs dozens of times throughout the year. This is just another one of the many ways that Clark Nexsen, PC connects with ODU.

It should be noted that Clark Nexsen, PC is the designer of record for ODU’s Quad residential housing, Powhatan Sports Center, SB Ballard Stadium and parking facility, ODU Crew Facility and, most recently, the new Learning Commons. The firm is very proud of the physical footprint that it leaves on campus but, more importantly, it is proud of the impression that it leaves on the community of students, alumni and friends at Old Dominion University.

“\textit{The Clark Nexsen scholarship has allowed me to pursue my educational goals without having to put them on hold for financial reasons.}”
Thanks to the help of some fast acting donors, the Darden College of Education received the largest single award of nearly $25 million in the U.S. Department of Education’s Investing in Innovation, or i3, grants competition. The award was contingent upon the University obtaining matching funds from the private sector equal to at least 5 percent of the grant award. In order to receive the grant the University had to secure $1.25 million in private commitments.

In the true spirit of community, numerous donors stepped up to the challenge. According to John Nunnery, executive director of The Center for Educational Partnerships (TCEP), “Private benefactors who contribute to improving math education, particularly in high-need urban and rural settings, will get tremendous leverage from their investment.” More than $1 million will be allocated to support math instructional improvements in the three Virginia school divisions that are official partners in the pilot implementation of the ODU project. The project will go to scale in subsequent years, and Nunnery is hopeful that private matching funds will ensure that many additional Virginia schools will join the initiative.

ODU’s i3 project, titled “A Technology-facilitated Scale-up of a Proven Model of Mathematics Instruction in High Needs Schools,” focuses on providing students in high-need middle schools with increased access to rigorous and engaging coursework in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) via scaled-up implementation of a proven cooperative learning model in mathematics instruction. That model, called STAD-Math, is an innovative, high-quality, multi-tiered approach to professional development that employs school-based math coaching, an online platform, and teacher-made videos of their own practices. Nunnery noted that the use of technology will play a key role in providing professional development to rural and urban areas in a highly cost-effective way.

“The intervention and associated professional development are designed to improve the mathematics achievement of middle school students in general, and specifically the achievement of sub-groups of students that are traditionally under-represented in STEM fields,” Nunnery said.

The interventions to be implemented via the ODU project are designed to help schools turn this trend around, boost student achievement in STEM subjects, increase access to rigorous STEM curricula for all students and increase participation in advanced STEM learning. The project is designed serve 135,000 students in 185 high-need middle schools across the United States over five years.

Linda Irwin-DeVitis, dean of the Darden College of Education, said, “The i3 grant is a major example of our commitment to improving our region and the commonwealth – the core of Old Dominion’s mission as a metropolitan research institution.”
President John Broderick and his wife, Kate, generously established a new award for community engagement. Called the Broderick-Evon Award for Community Engagement and Service, it will be awarded to a student annually who has displayed commitment to service and civic engagement to the university and surrounding community through superior leadership and service.

The award is of special significance to the Brodericks – it is named in honor of their mothers. Through family donations, it will guarantee a minimum $3,000 award to an ODU student who embodies the community spirit of the Brodericks’ mothers.

Ellen Broderick, mother of President Broderick, taught her children the importance of helping others. She impressed upon them from a young age, that actions speak louder than words. She was one of those people who cared for others before herself. It was not hard to see and appreciate her concern for others on a daily basis.

Kate Broderick’s mother, Joan Evon, volunteered in her church and community and service to others was at the heart of everything she did. According to Kate, her mother received dozens of service awards for helping so many people navigate the sometimes complicated loan and mortgage system at the bank where she worked. “My siblings and I found the awards in her desk at work after she passed. She never said anything to us about it - she just tirelessly and quietly went about her work. In fact, the day of her viewing we met some wonderful folks who came to pay tribute to her and tell us that my Mom gave them money for a bus ride, sat with them to fill out loan applications, and so on.”

Both women set the bar high for their children and grandchildren. The Broderick-Evon award, which recognizes that same spirit in others, is one way for President and Mrs. Broderick to pay forward the wonderful blessings they received as children.

All students are eligible to apply or deserving individuals may be nominated. The recipient will receive a monetary award and will be announced at the University’s Student Awards Reception and Dinner each spring.

The award is of special significance to the Brodericks – it is named in honor of their mothers.
This year, for the first time, we are featuring the Old Dominion University Community Development Corporation in the annual report. The Old Dominion University Community Development Corporation, or CDC, was established in 2006 to revitalize and develop the communities and neighborhoods surrounding ODU. The CDC, under the direction of E. Ann Grandy, is the first and only university community development corporation in Virginia, a testament to ODU’s commitment to community engagement.

The Community Development Corporation states its vision as “Working together to create and sustain healthy neighborhoods.” The CDC is well on its way to realizing its vision with the development of the workforce housing community in the Lambert’s Point section adjacent to campus. The new neighborhood, called 43rd Street Norfolk, is a 51-unit townhome development built specifically for city of Norfolk employees such as teachers, police officers and medical professionals, as well as ODU employees. The location – next to campus and within walking distance of the University Village – is definitely a strong selling point, as is the price, said Grandy. She added that the Virginia Housing Development Authority may provide down payment and closing cost assistance to qualified first-time homebuyers.

William “Ted” Farmer, Research Analyst for the Office of Institutional Research and Assessment at ODU, jumped at the chance to move into the new development. A resident since August 2011, Farmer was sold on the neighborhood by its location. Not only is Farmer an ODU employee but he also holds season tickets for football and both men’s and women’s basketball. He would be the first to tell you that he is on campus more often than not.

For Farmer, 43rd Street Norfolk is more than just a home—it is a community. Since moving to the neighborhood, Farmer has become active in Lambert’s Point. He attends events at the Lambert’s Point Community Center and has become friends with his neighbors, who include a church pastor and a city of Norfolk police officer. Farmer has even become an impromptu environmentalist; he walks to work daily and rides public transportation when possible.

Farmer is a shining example of the type of neighbor that ODU had hoped to attract. It is critical for the city of Norfolk to encourage employees not just to work in Norfolk, but to live and play in the city as well. The CDC is building sustainable communities that will help to create clean and safe streets, fortify public education and foster economic opportunity for its residents.

The 43rd Street Norfolk development is slated to be completed by the end of 2012.
Dr. Lewis W. Webb Jr., ODU’s first president, once said, “This institution will go way beyond all of us…the value of working with something like this is to see that you’re taking part in the long-range development of something that will be here for many, many years to come.” It is in this spirit that we are proud to introduce the Lewis W. Webb Jr. Society for our distinguished donors who give annually to academic initiatives.

The Webb Society is a community of alumni, parents and friends who support the inspiring legacy of the University’s first president. It is well known that Dr. Webb’s lifelong dream was to see the Norfolk Division of the College of William and Mary become an independent institution. Under his leadership that dream became a reality. Today, Old Dominion is the strong, independent and innovative university that Dr. Webb envisioned. He would be proud.

As we continue to experience an extreme reduction in state support, your participation is needed more than ever. By joining the Webb Society, you help us ensure that ODU is able to maintain the steady balance of a high quality, convenient education and the creative innovation for which it is known.

ODU is ever grateful to the many alumni, parents and friends whose annual leadership-level support sustains our unique university. Collectively, Webb Society members are helping ODU students positively impact our local communities and the world around us.

Annual operating gifts to the Educational Foundation of $1,000 or more qualify you for membership in the Webb Society.

Kendra and Glenn Croshaw have committed their lives to impacting the lives of others: Kendra, before her retirement in 2006, as director of government relations and public policy for Children’s Hospital of The King’s Daughters; and Glenn, currently as a Circuit Court judge in Virginia Beach and formerly as a member of the House of Delegates for the Commonwealth of Virginia. The two have carried that commitment into their estate plans through a bequest to Old Dominion University for two endowments, one to create an internship in public service for graduate students and another to provide student leadership training through the Office of Student Activities and Leadership.

For Kendra ’00, this bequest is merely an extension of her deep and long time commitment to her alma mater. Her life’s work proves that she has never been one to do things the easy way. Like that of many ODU students, Kendra’s life was a juggling act – balancing a career and school. For 13 years, she took classes, worked full time at CHKD, had responsibilities at home and served on the boards of several community organizations. At CHKD, she traveled frequently to Washington D.C., and Richmond to monitor federal and state legislation and other issues that might affect CHKD and the wider health industry.

From 1999 to 2006, the government relations team succeeded in securing more than $15 million in state and federal funding for CHKD’s graduate medical education program, the neonatal intensive care unit, the child abuse program and capital projects. Meanwhile, Kendra also found time to serve two terms on Old Dominion’s Board of Visitors, which included two years as vice rector. During her service on the Board of Visitors, the football program was approved by unanimous vote. After her retirement from CHKD in 2006, true to form, Kendra continued her juggling act. She went back to school, this time to study interior design, while continuing her various volunteer activities.

“I had the pleasure to serve with Kendra on the ODU board of visitors for several years,” said Marc Jacobson, former rector of ODU’s Board of Visitors. “As a member, Kendra always provided well-reasoned thoughts and opinions in a calm and professional manner and, indeed, was a highly respected member of the board.” He went on to say that the Croshaw gift will change the lives of future students. “Both Kendra and Glenn are individuals who have made and continue to make meaningful contributions not only to ODU but our entire community, for which we are all extremely grateful and appreciative.”

The year 1930 was the most pivotal in the history of higher education in Hampton Roads. In the heart of the Great Depression, visionary leaders in the Norfolk community saw a need for a college to educate students from Norfolk and the surrounding area. In February of that year, the establishment of the Norfolk Division of the College of William and Mary not only realized that opportunity for students, but also became a cornerstone of the entire City of Norfolk.

On September 12, 1930, when 206 students attended inaugural classes in the old Larchmont school building, an abandoned elementary school on Hampton Boulevard, the Norfolk Division of the College of William and Mary was born. More than 30 years later, February 16, 1962, Governor Albertis S. Harrison signed legislation dissolving the Colleges of William and Mary system, in effect, granting independence to the Norfolk Division, and six months later, the board chose the name Old Dominion College. In 1969, the college achieved another milestone, becoming Old Dominion University.

You are cordially invited to join The 1930 Society at Old Dominion University. Membership in The 1930 Society is bestowed upon alumni and friends who have designated ODU as a recipient of their estate or other planned gifts. Outstanding public universities are built as the result of continuing generous private support. The 1930 Society reflects the vision of ODU’s founders and supports their mission to educate students from Hampton Roads, and afar, for generations to come. Bequests, including annuities, stocks and other appreciated assets, may be used for membership. If you would like to support the university through a planned gift and create a lasting legacy, please call Barbara Henley, director of planned giving, at 757-683-6863.

On April 14, 1955, the charter was signed for the College of William and Mary, Norfolk Division, Educational Foundation. At the first meeting of the trustees in November 1955, the board presented and adopted bylaws, adopted the foundation seal, and elected trustees and officers.

These actions formally established the foundation to receive, administer and distribute funds and property of all kinds, exclusively to further the educational activities and objectives of the college. On November 5, 1962, the Old Dominion College Educational Foundation expanded its goals to include raising funds for the faculty salary supplements and for the library. Since its charter was signed, the Educational Foundation has continued to broaden its support to the university.

Financial Summary
Endowment Values and Support

The past year was a tough year for most endowments, to include those of the University and its Foundations. As shown in the box to the left, the endowments remained relatively flat from year to year with a total value of approximately $157 million. Our total investment pool, which includes the $157 million endowment, was valued at $161 million as of December.

Overall, in absolute terms, the endowment pool returned a very modest 2.3% for the 12 months ending in December 2011. While absolute performance was low, we are buoyed by the fact that our relative performance exceeded our benchmark by 60 basis points and fared very well nationally when compared to the performance of our peers. Our trailing 12-month performance through both June and December exceeded that of our peers and ranked us in the top 25% of all funds as of December 2011.

The Investment Committee continues to act proactively, adjusting the portfolio within our strategic asset allocation to be positioned to take advantage of the overall economic recovery. While no major funding commitments were made to new private investments in 2011, we expect to reverse that trend in 2012. In spite of the slow growth of the endowment, the Foundations continue to provide significant support to vital University programs. During the past year, the Foundations provided almost $8 million in both annual and endowed support to the University in support of its Strategic Plan.
