The 2012-13 academic year was one of many achievements for the Old Dominion University community, both on our campus and in the many communities our academics, research, civic engagement and economic development efforts impact.

Our long-envisioned Arts District came into sharper focus with the opening of the Goode Theatre and the groundbreaking of a new arts building in the University Village. The state-of-the-art Goode Theatre provides our students with a premier theatre and film facility and the community with a beautiful venue for riveting and acclaimed performances. The new arts building will house the art program, offices, studio space and the university’s Hofheimer Art Library. Thanks to an exciting collaboration with the Chrysler Museum of Art, it will also house the more than 112,000 rare and unique volumes of the Jean Outland Chrysler Art Library, regarded as one of the most significant art libraries in the South.

Last fall, we established the Center for Innovative Transportation Solutions (CITS), which develops and applies innovative techniques to address a broad variety of transportation issues facing the region, state and nation. Located in Virginia Beach Town Center, CITS researchers are already working on a number of projects for Hampton Roads that have national implications as well. Coupled with its status as a U.S. Department of Education Tier One University Transportation Center, Old Dominion is quickly gaining a national reputation as a leader in transportation research.

CITS is just one component of the unique Modeling, Simulation and Visualization Engineering program at Old Dominion. As pioneers in the field, Old Dominion offers the only bachelor’s-through-doctoral modeling and simulation degrees in the country and this May we graduated the first undergraduate class!

Another initiative that underscores our academic, research and community impact focus is the Center for Global Health, which aims to improve the health and quality of life for people locally and around the world by leveraging the unique strengths of the Hampton Roads communities in education, research and outreach. The Center will encourage interdisciplinary collaboration to identify challenges and solutions from a variety of perspectives, ensuring the greatest benefit to the community.

I am pleased to report that Old Dominion University received its reaffirmation of accreditation from the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools Commission on Colleges (SACSCOC) in December. The reaffirmation cited no recommendations for improvement and gave specific commendation for our Quality Enhancement Plan and distance learning programs. It provides us with accreditation until 2022 and allows us to continue to focus on our strategic plan and move forward with our goals for the future.

Of course, our driving force is our students, who continue to inspire us each and every year. One student in particular, Devon Taylor, overcame a variety of obstacles to graduate from the College of Health Sciences with perfect grades. His hard work was rewarded in the form of a full scholarship to Harvard Medical School. Another current student and member of the swimming team, civil engineering major Sidni Hoxha, represented his native Albania at the 2012 Olympic Games in London. Not a bad accomplishment for summer break.

As always, accomplishments such as these would not be possible without the continued support of the entire Old Dominion University family. Whether you are an alumnus, friend, student, faculty or staff member, you are an integral part of our success. Your investment in our university is an investment in the future. Thank you!

John R. Broderick
It is my pleasure to share the 2012 Foundations Annual Report with you. On the following pages you will read about the impact that your gifts make at Old Dominion and you will also read about some of the new and exciting things that are happening on campus.

As many of you know, President John R. Broderick and his staff have worked tirelessly to advocate for additional support for Old Dominion University from the Commonwealth of Virginia. Historically, Old Dominion has been underfunded compared to other institutions of higher education in Virginia. Because of this, we have become very efficient at using the resources entrusted to us by the Commonwealth of Virginia, but these resources are still not enough. Over the years, we have come to rely on private funds more than ever. On behalf of all of us at Old Dominion University, I would like to take the opportunity to thank you for your generosity in 2012. Together we raised more than $18 million and we could not have done it without each and every gift from alumni and friends like you. This spirit of giving allows us to continue transforming the lives of those we serve.

There are so many things happening on campus that it is impossible to feature all of them in this report. In July, using unrestricted funds donated for education, the Educational Foundation was able to send four students to the Department of Defense Worldwide Educational Symposium to demonstrate a smartphone app that they developed for college students to help keep track of classes, assignments, jobs and extracurricular activities. The app, called Student TA, was developed by Raqwon Perryman, Gregory Rogers, Angel Henderson and Darius Moore under their company name, ArcDNA. These students embrace entrepreneurship and interdisciplinary studies, two things we are striving to promote at Old Dominion. Investments in academic endeavors such as these help create a dynamic campus rich in ideas and innovation.

Another exciting initiative from the past year was our support of the Quality of Life in Hampton Roads survey conducted by the Social Science Research Center (SSRC) here at the university. As part of our ongoing efforts to promote community engagement, the SSRC surveyed over 700 randomly selected residents of Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Chesapeake, Hampton, Newport News, Portsmouth and Suffolk. The survey is used to gauge perceptions and attitudes on a variety of local issues including transportation and traffic, local and state government, education, emergency preparedness, the economy, and other vital statistics affecting the region. The survey also provides a platform through which ODU faculty develop data for research projects. The resulting data have provided a starting point for research presentations, student assignments, and grant proposals for faculty in multiple colleges and disciplines.

These noteworthy happenings, and others detailed within, are vital steps in educating future leaders and advancing the mission of the university. It is through these contributions that Old Dominion University can continue to foster creativity, encourage independence and teach skills for personal and professional success.

Message from the Executive Director
Over the past year there were a number of exciting developments related to the physical campus of Old Dominion. On the next few pages you can read about some of the most notable events on campus from the rededication of renovated buildings to the grand opening of new buildings and beyond. Given all of the recent building activity, it is only appropriate to mention that in November 2012, Chief Operating Officer Dave Harnage, announced the kickoff of the new master plan project for the university. This project will take into consideration the many facets of campus life including the academic and strategic plan, athletic facilities, building design, entrances and gateways, landscaping and transportation, just to name a few.
Driving down Hampton Boulevard today, it is hard to believe that the Ted Constant Convocation Center opened just 10 years ago this past November. The 9,100-seat multipurpose arena is the cornerstone of the University Village and has hosted countless Monarch and Lady Monarch basketball games, concerts, graduations, fairs, festivals and more. The Ted Constant Convocation Center was named for the late local businessman, Theodore Constant. Ted Constant and his wife, Constance, were loyal supporters of Old Dominion. Over the years they endowed numerous scholarships and fellowships and supported ODU basketball. They donated $5 million to jump-start the University Village project. Today the University Village is a 75-acre mixed-use development featuring restaurants, offices, research labs and student housing. Meanwhile, the Constant Center is inspiring architecture across campus. The recently renovated Batten Arts and Letters Building and the newly dedicated Dragas Hall both have designs reminiscent of the building that changed the face of campus just one decade ago.
he name L. R. Hill is well known in the Hampton Roads region because of the award-winning home design and construction by L. R. Hill Custom Homes. On December 12, 2012, the name became even more recognizable with the dedication of the L. R. Hill Sports Complex at ODU, formerly known as the Powhatan Sports Complex. The complex was renamed to honor the generosity of Larry Ross Hill. Hill, an avid fan of ODU football, gave a generous gift to create a football program endowment. The endowment will help give the football team financial flexibility for equipment, recruitment and training.

Not much has changed since the sports complex was first dedicated in 2009. The state-of-the-art facility is home to the football, field hockey and lacrosse programs. It features a 1,500-seat stadium for field hockey and lacrosse, as well as two football practice fields. Behind the two-story terrazzo entrance lobby, the first floor boasts a 6,000-square-foot strength training area that includes the latest in fitness and weight equipment and an advanced locker room for the football team. On the second floor, all of the football coaches have their own offices, and the facility includes video editing/projection suites. Likewise, the complex provides modern offices and locker rooms for field hockey and lacrosse, plus an enclosed area that overlooks one end of the stadium. Two visitor locker rooms offer the ability to host multi-team tournaments.

The complex was renamed to honor the generosity of Larry Ross Hill. Hill, an avid fan of ODU football, gave a generous gift to create a football program endowment.
Not long ago, the basketball practice facility at Old Dominion was just a proposal on paper, but thanks to the generosity of brothers Elza and Anthony Mitchum, the basketball practice facility will soon become a reality. The Mitchum family gave a generous gift to the Old Dominion Athletic Foundation to name the practice facility in honor of their parents. Naming a building on campus is a major decision that will be a long-lasting feature of Old Dominion’s history. The brothers knew that this gift would allow them to honor their parents for years to come.

The Mitchum family had humble beginnings in South Carolina. They, along with the Cooper family, opened their first business, BW Mitchum Trucking Company Inc., in 1958 and never imagined that they would eventually own several more businesses. Both Elza and Anthony attribute their success to their parents, Bernett and Blanche. They built a strong foundation that has allowed the brothers, and several other family members, to work together and become successful. Together, Elza, Anthony, their other brother William, sister Jeannette, and cousin Ronnie Cooper own four businesses. The original family business, BW Mitchum Trucking Company Inc., provides hauling services in South Carolina and throughout the U.S. Ronnie, his wife and children manage the Charleston operation. C&M Industries Inc. and Atlantic Industrial Services Inc. provide specialized services to commercial and industrial clients throughout central and southeast Virginia and North Carolina. Their fourth business, JEAL Associates LLC, is an asset and real estate investment firm. Elza’s son, Alex, and other family members, are working in the business. In addition to their business endeavors, family members are well known for their generosity and involvement in the community.

Regarding their decision to support the basketball practice facility, Elza said, “The Mitchum family has been a part of the ODU family for quite some time. Several family members have attended the university, and sports have played a significant role in our family’s lives. We have been blessed with sustained business growth and now wish to share in our success with a gift to ODU in honor of our parents, Bernett and Blanche Mitchum, with The Bernett and Blanche Mitchum Basketball Practice Facility. We are extremely pleased and proud that the facility will be of major importance to the ODU Basketball Program for years to come.” The entire family, business associates, friends and clients enjoy cheering on the Monarchs at football and basketball games.

The Bernett and Blanche Mitchum Basketball Practice Facility will be located adjacent to the Ted Constant Convocation Center on Monarch Way and will be home for both the men’s and women’s basketball programs. The state-of-the-art facility will include practice courts, offices, locker rooms, a lounge and a weight training room. The excitement and enthusiasm building around the facility becoming a reality is impressive. “This generous gift from the Mitchum family will take our student-athlete experience to a higher level and allow us to stretch our potential in the basketball programs,” says Lady Monarch Head Coach Karen Barefoot. “The impact this facility will have on our recruiting is tremendous.”
Siblings Honor Parents Through Practice Facility
Dragas Hall Gets New Look
One of the oldest remaining buildings on the main campus of Old Dominion University got a face-lift this past year. Many remember the historic building with the honeycomb façade as Hughes Library, the first library on campus but, on June 13, 2012, the building most recently known as Hughes Hall got a fresh start when it was rededicated as Dragas Hall. The newly renovated Dragas Hall, which now features the Hughes Atrium, received an Award of Merit for Best Renovated or Historic Rehabilitation Project at the 15th annual Hampton Roads Association for Commercial Real Estate’s Excellence in Development Design Awards competition.

The building was originally named for Robert Morton Hughes, a prominent lawyer who served for many years on the College of William & Mary Board of Visitors. He advocated for a two-year branch of the school to be located in Norfolk and raised the issue with William & Mary’s president as early as 1925. Robert Morton Hughes was one of the founding pioneers of Old Dominion University.

The original Dragas International Center at ODU was established in 1995 with a generous gift from brothers George Jr. and Marcus Dragas. Unfortunately, the original Dragas building was razed during the Foreman Field renovation project. In addition to supporting the International Center, the Dragas family funded the Dragas Professorship in International Studies Endowment as well as a new program endowment at ODU that has yet to be named.

Today the new Dragas Hall is home to the Office of International Programs, which includes the study abroad office and English Language Center. It also houses the academic side of the computer science department, International Student and Scholar Services, the Office of International Admissions and the Filipino American Center. The facility also contains classrooms and computer labs.
Grand Opening of the Goode Theatre
Those are the wise words of Susan, David, Christina and Martha Goode, whose passion for theatre was the inspiration behind their generous gift to the arts at Old Dominion University. To acknowledge their generosity, the newest theatre facility at the University was dedicated in their name on April 19, 2012. The grand opening of the Goode Theatre featured a reception, theatre tours and scenes from “Metamorphoses.” David and Susan Goode have long supported the arts at Old Dominion University, having established the David & Susan Goode Endowment for the Arts in 2006. They are avid collectors of art themselves and their daughters, Christina and Martha, are both strongly inspired by art and theatre.

Located at 46th Street and Monarch Way, the 22,050-square-foot, state-of-the-art black box theatre seats 185 and is a unique combination of both theatre and film, with a flexible theatrical venue and fully outfitted sound stage. It also features a scene shop to service both facilities.

The Goode Theatre represents the second facility in what will become the Old Dominion University Arts District in the University Village. The Baron and Ellin Gordon Art Galleries, located at 45th Street and Monarch Way, opened in 2007 with the Gordon Self-Taught Art Gallery and the University Gallery, a changing space that displays works by faculty members and students from the ODU art department, as well as works by contemporary artists of international, national and regional repute. Construction is under way on the new arts building at 47th Street and Monarch Way that will house the art department, art library and classrooms.

“Theatre does more than entertain...It helps us find a way in a world that has no script.”
Harry B. Adreon grew up at the corner of Gates and Colley avenues in Norfolk. With his father working at H.B. Gilpin Company, a wholesale pharmaceutical company, it wasn't surprising that, as a student at Maury High School, Harry was attracted to young Beatrice “Bea” Rice, who planned to become a pharmacist.

Following high school, Harry enrolled in the Norfolk Division of William & Mary, now ODU, and Bea went to Mary Washington College to major in chemistry. The two continued to date long-distance. Immediately after graduating from ODU, Harry enlisted in the Marine Corps Reserve as a private and spent the summer in weekly drills at the Amphibious Base at Little Creek.

In the fall, Harry moved to Blacksburg to study architecture at VPI, now Virginia Tech. He received his undergraduate degree in 1950 and stayed on to complete his master’s degree in 1952. Meanwhile, Bea graduated from MWC and moved to Richmond to begin pharmacy school at the Medical College of Virginia, one of only four women in a class of 85 – a staggering, but common, ratio at the time.

With his master’s degree in hand, Harry entered the Marine Corps’ Officer Candidates School in Quantico, and that December, with school finally behind them, Harry and Bea were married at St. Andrew’s Episcopal Church in Norfolk.

Following Harry’s discharge as a Marine captain, the Adreons bought a house in Alexandria, where Harry began his career as an architect, specializing in medical buildings and nursing homes. Although warned at graduation that most companies wouldn’t employ a professional woman, Bea worked as a pharmacist at the Washington Clinic, a private diagnostic and clinical center, for the next 18 years.

Their lives were happy, especially during the many weekends spent at their cottage at Calvert Cliffs, Md., where they enjoyed sailing on the Chesapeake Bay.

Though her own career was going well, in the early 1970s, Bea felt a need to do more for her clients than fill their prescriptions. Many were confused about their prescription drugs and the possible interactions among them and between them and over-the-counter drugs. While she wanted to continue her work as a pharmacist, she also saw a need to offer counseling, something pharmacists were not allowed to do. Determined to expand her role, Bea enrolled at George Washington University, where she earned a master’s degree in special studies, with concentrations in counseling, management sciences, and women’s studies.

After her graduation in 1976, she was invited to stay as a consultant, counselor and teacher in the medical school’s gerontology program.

Still unable to offer the combined services of a pharmacist and counselor, though, Bea launched her own business, Pharmacy Counseling Services Inc. Testing a hunch, she offered her services free to elderly neighbors who needed help reviewing their medications, and she saw her patients return again and again – willing to pay for her services. As her business grew, she moved into an office and consultation space at Harry’s firm and acquired a long client list of individuals, universities and long-term care facilities.

In early 2005, Bea began to suffer from weakness and shortness of breath, symptoms of atrial fibrillation that eventually led to congestive heart failure. Sadly, her life was cut short.

To honor Bea’s memory, Harry included ODU in his will, with a gift to establish The Beatrice Rice Adreon Endowed Scholarship for Pre-Pharmacy Studies. The scholarship will be awarded to students who share Beatrice’s passion for pharmacy as a science and her commitment to helping people live the healthiest lives possible. Wanting to do still more, Harry has already begun to fund the scholarship. He looks forward to meeting Beatrice Adreon Scholars, as a link back to his beloved wife, Bea.

Today, most pharmacies offer private areas where pharmacists can consult freely with their clients. From her early days as a rare female pharmacy student to her later career as a consultant in prescription services, Bea was a vanguard in opening the field of pharmacy to women and in expanding the pharmacist’s role beyond simply filling prescriptions. What a splendid model she has left for the Beatrice Rice Adreon Scholars to follow – and what a loving tribute Harry has made through this scholarship!

Stock Rises in Business School With State-of-the-Art Lab
A t first glance, the newest lab in the College of Business and Public Administration looks like an ordinary computer lab, but look again and you will see that the computers are actually state-of-the-art Bloomberg Terminals. This past fall, with the installation of 24 Bloomberg Terminals, the college opened the Gregory A. Lumsden Trading Room and Research Lab. Few other universities can boast such a large collection of terminals and, without the generous support of Old Dominion MBA alumnus Gregory Lumsden, the trading room may never have become a reality.

When Lumsden started his MBA at Old Dominion he had never studied business and had been working in the public sector. After being exposed to the fundamentals of accounting, finance, operations, management and marketing, he knew that he was on his way to a new career path. After graduation Lumsden secured a Series 7 general securities representative license and sold mortgage-backed securities. In doing so, he had the opportunity to experience trading on Wall Street and of his experience he said, “I watched the flow of information in the 1980s and early 1990s really change how the mortgage-backed arena sold and traded both securities and options. I want to help ODU students get in touch with how it works today - for all securities.”

The students who take advantage of the resources in the Gregory A. Lumsden Trading Room and Research Lab will have an appealing skill on their resume. They can even use the lab to earn a Bloomberg Essentials Certificate. “It is my hope that the experience for many of the students in using the room will give them a high degree of practical experience with which they can better leverage for career opportunities. I want our graduates to get good jobs, and we want to make our students more attractive to the outside world. It is my hope that this room keeps us moving in that direction,” said Lumsden.

Bloomberg Terminals provide a portal to all of the real-time information that Bloomberg and other news and financial services collect and analyze, displayed in a user-friendly format. The Bloomberg Terminals are not just for finance majors; the Trading Room and Research Lab is being used in cross-disciplinary studies. Dean of the College of Business and Public Administration Gil Yochum explained that the Trading Room will benefit the entire campus. “Whenever we have the ability to integrate real-world data into classrooms, it’s a great platform from which to ask questions and find answers. It doesn’t matter if you’re in finance, engineering or the social sciences. It’s a resource,” said Yochum.

The Gregory A. Lumsden Trading Room and Research Lab is located on the second floor of Constant Hall. It is operated under the direction of Mohammad Najand, a member of the college’s Economic Forecasting Project team, and will be open and staffed from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.
A new species of plant in the coffee family has been named in honor of Old Dominion University botanist Timothy Motley.* The plant now known as Chiococca motleyana had been classified during the 19th century as the only member of the genus Asemnantha.

Motley, who was the J. Robert Stiffler Distinguished Professor of Botany, authored a journal article in 2005 describing DNA analyses he and colleagues had conducted on this small shrub. The article made a case for a reclassification to the genus Chiococca.

An article by Attila Borhidi, a botanist based in Hungary who is an expert on the coffee family (Rubiaceae), supported the reclassification and formally renamed the plant Chiococca motleyana. Borhidi’s article, “Studies of Mexican Rubiaceae XXXV: Chiococca motleyana nomen novum,” appeared in the journal Acta Botanica Hungarica.

Chiococca is a genus in the coffee family of about 20 species, with the greatest species diversity in Mexico and Central America, but with a few species extending into the Caribbean and South America. Chiococca motleyana is from southern Mexico and northern Central America.

“I have been studying the evolution and systematics of the coffee family for 20 years,” Motley said. “This plant was originally placed incorrectly as the lone member of its own genus, but by comparing a large complex of genera using DNA analyses we showed that the species was just an unusual member of the Chiococca group. It was the publication in the American Journal of Botany (2005), in which we presented the data and detailed the need for reclassification, that led Borhidi to make the necessary taxonomic change and rename the species.”

Chiococca motleyana, which grows in arid regions, differs from all other species in two ways: its flowers have stamens (pollen-producing organs) that are fused in a ring and the flowers have four petals instead of the typical five. The plant produces attractive, small white berries that are dispersed by birds.

Tragically, Dr. Timothy Motley passed away on March 28, 2013, after suffering sudden cardiac arrest. He was 47.
Plant Species Named for ODU Botanist
Graduate Student Shaped by Childhood in Venezuela
As a young boy growing up in Venezuela, Carmelo Padrino Barrios became very aware of those less fortunate than him. Carmelo’s father involved him in various community service opportunities, and Carmelo often found himself observing doctors providing care to underprivileged members of his community. Looking back, Carmelo’s interest in health care was likely spurred on by his experiences as a child in his hometown. When his father’s job brought him to the United States, Carmelo discovered Old Dominion University. It was here that he decided to study dental hygiene so that, perhaps, he too could help people as he had observed those doctors doing in Venezuela all those years ago.

It was not long before Carmelo started following through on his aspirations by participating in numerous service learning opportunities. On one such occasion, Carmelo and his fellow dental hygiene students provided free dental cleanings to homeless citizens during Norfolk’s annual Homeless Connect event held downtown. Other times, Carmelo could be found in local elementary schools teaching children with special needs about proper brushing and the importance of healthy habits. Each of these service projects, along with his classroom training, gave Carmelo the confidence he needed to become a dental hygienist in private practice after he received his undergraduate degree in 2010.

After a year in private practice, Carmelo felt Old Dominion calling him again. Today he is a graduate student studying dental hygiene and conducting research related to dental anxiety. Despite the fact that Carmelo is busy as a full-time student and teaching assistant, he still finds time to serve the community. This past year Carmelo interned with the local nonprofit, Physicians for Peace. As an intern he participated in a trip to Nicaragua where he worked as a Spanish-English translator at a dental conference sponsored by the National Autonomous University of Nicaragua (UNAN).

During his trip to Nicaragua Carmelo was reminded of those times as a child in Venezuela when he would observe doctors caring for those less fortunate. While in Nicaragua he regained perspective about the differences between health care in the United States and health care in developing countries. “They can work with so little and they are so grateful for what little they do have,” said Carmelo.

A delegation from UNAN recently traveled to Old Dominion to learn more about the dental hygiene program and Carmelo, once again, worked as a translator. The dean in Nicaragua has decided to model UNAN’s dental hygiene program after the one here at ODU, which does not surprise Carmelo in the least. Based on his experiences, he believes that Old Dominion University’s dental hygiene graduates are some of the best in the industry and, if Carmelo is any example, then we would have to agree with that.

Despite the fact that Carmelo is busy as a full-time student and teaching assistant, he still finds time to serve the community.
Unique Gift Impacts Future of University
any wise men and women have been inspired by the phrase, “From those to whom much is given, much is expected,” and Rick Burnell is no different. This past December, Burnell, a 1971 graduate of the College of Arts and Letters, selflessly donated a 3-acre parcel of land to the university. The land is located at Taylor Road and Pughsville Road in Chesapeake. This unique gift was donated specifically to the Old Dominion University Real Estate Foundation to further advance its mission. The thought of having a hand in improving the university is pleasing for Burnell. As a Portsmouth native and current Virginia Beach resident, he believes that Old Dominion University has a positive impact on the entire Hampton Roads community. He has watched the campus flourish since his days as a student and would love to see it expand further and impact future generations of students, faculty and community members.

It is only fitting that Burnell’s gift will have an impact on the future development of the university; after all, he is a real estate broker and developer himself. As president and CEO of Atlantic Commercial Real Estate Services Inc., Burnell has made a living developing and scouting properties for Harris Teeter grocery and 7-Eleven convenience stores. But, he was not always on a path to becoming a real estate developer. In fact, his first job after graduation was with a credit firm, writing credit profiles for various businesses, followed by a stint selling copy machines.

Burnell was first bit by the real estate bug after his experience flipping an old home that he had purchased from his father. After more than a year of hard labor renovating the home, he was ready to sell. When he met with a real estate agent to negotiate the sale he was impressed by how little time the agent spent selling the home compared to how much time he spent renovating it. Ever the opportunist, Burnell asked if the agent needed any help and, just like that, he launched his real estate career. Eventually he transitioned from residential to commercial real estate and enjoyed much success with the Armada Hoffler organization. In 2001 Burnell was ready for a new challenge and he opened his own business, the aforementioned Atlantic Commercial Real Estate Services Inc.

Not only a husband, but also a father and grandfather, Burnell is slowing down his professional life in favor of spending quality time with his family. A man of modest beginnings, he reflects fondly on his time at Old Dominion and credits his education here with preparing him intellectually and socially for a career in business. With local roots and Old Dominion experiences intertwined along Burnell’s path to success, making a contribution to promote the success of others was inevitable. Burnell hopes that his gift will inspire other alumni and friends to consider donating, especially in ways they may never have considered, such as with a gift of real estate. A donation of land or property has as much impact as a monetary gift. After all, it is an investment in the future of Old Dominion University.
The 1930 Society Members

As of December 31, 2012

Membership in The 1930 Society is bestowed upon alumni and friends who have designated ODU as a recipient of their estate or other planned gifts. Outstanding public universities are built as the result of continuing generous private support. The 1930 Society reflects the vision of ODU’s founders and supports their mission to educate students from Norfolk and afar for generations to come. Bequests, including annuities, stocks and other appreciated assets, may be used for membership.

On April 14, 1955, the charter was signed for the College of William and Mary, Norfolk Division, Educational Foundation. At the first meeting of the trustees in November 1955, the board presented and adopted bylaws, adopted the foundation seal, and elected trustees and officers. These actions formally established the foundation to receive, administer and distribute funds and property of all kinds, exclusively to further the educational activities and objectives of the college. On November 5, 1962, the Old Dominion College Educational Foundation expanded its goals to include raising funds for the faculty salary supplements and for the library. Since its charter was signed, the Educational Foundation has continued to broaden its support to the university.
Established in 1964 by Friends of the University, the Athletic Foundation has as its mission the development of a high-quality athletic program for Old Dominion. The foundation strives to support each of the university’s 18 athletic programs, including baseball, men’s and women’s basketball, field hockey, football, men’s and women’s golf, lacrosse, rowing, men’s and women’s sailing, men’s and women’s soccer, men’s and women’s swimming, men’s and women’s tennis and wrestling.
Established in 1995, the Real Estate Foundation was formed to receive, acquire, manage and develop real estate for the benefit of the university. Governed by a board of trustees, the foundation currently owns and manages properties on the Norfolk campus, the Virginia Beach Higher Education Center and the Tri-Cities Higher Education Center. The ODU Real Estate Foundation is one of the largest in the Commonwealth of Virginia with assets over $90 million. The foundation continues to develop one of its most ambitious projects, University Village, a 75-acre, mixed-use project that includes retail shops, restaurants, an art gallery, a bookstore, theatres, office research buildings, a hotel and student apartments.

The Endowment Fund for the University and its Foundations had a good year in 2012 with a net increase of 8% to a total value of $169 million. The increase reflects substantial real growth in the endowments as the economy continues to regain strength. Overall, the endowment pool earned a respectable investment return of 11.6% for the 12 months ending in December 2012, resulting in a net of fee increase of almost $19 million in market value. Our total investment pool, which includes the $169 million endowment, exceeded $174 million this past year.

Investment performance continues to be a primary factor in the long-term growth. While absolute performance was good, we also are encouraged by the fact that our relative performance exceeded our benchmark by 160 basis points. We fared very well nationally when compared to the performance of other college and university endowments as our trailing 12-month performance through both June and December exceeded that of our peers.

The Foundation’s Investment Committee continues to strive to maximize the value of the endowment and work to ensure future generations of Old Dominion University students and faculty have the same, or greater, relative benefit in the decades to come. We continue to identify and fund high quality, diversified investments in both public and private markets that include equity, fixed income and real assets. Additional commitments made in the past year to real estate, energy and private equity investments will provide increased diversification and a portfolio less subject to the volatility of the traditional equity markets. During the past year, the Foundations provided over $9 million in both annual and endowed support to the University in support of its Strategic Plan.
